Target Group

This course is part of a training project funded by Northern Sydney LHD and is open to NSLHD Health Workers and Government and Non-Government workers from the Northern Sydney district who work with or have contact with children or adults who have children in their care.

Course Description

Increasing recognition is being given to the impact of early interpersonal trauma on children and young people. Exposure to many forms of interpersonal violence is implicated in the aetiology of challenging behaviours in childhood and adolescence and potentially greater health and psychological difficulties in adulthood. This 2 day course will build on workers' existing knowledge about the effects and dynamics of abuse and neglect and identify trauma frameworks and responses. Case planning and goal setting for families where there is risk of harm for children and young people will also be explored.

Learning Outcomes

Differentiate between the different types of abuse and the impact of historical beliefs on current practice. Describe indicators and effects of child abuse and neglect and the links with other forms of violence. Describe and discuss the intersections between neglectful parenting and the effects of interpersonal trauma on children and young people. Explore a trauma framework for working with children and young people. Apply practice tools to assist children who have been traumatised. Apply information about the impact of trauma to case planning.
